Teresa is new to the department but not to sociology and criminal justice. She enjoys researching and teaching about juvenile delinquency and recently won the American Society of Criminology award for Outstanding Article of the Year for “Love, Sex and Crime: Adolescent Romantic Relationships and Offending.”

She also teaches introduction to sociology, criminology, stratification, and statistics. “I teach because my highest hope is to provide students with an ‘ah-ha’ moment that changes the way they think. Mentoring students is something that comes naturally to me, and I find it extremely rewarding.”
