This is what the first page of a short MLA-style paper looks like. Unless your teacher tells you otherwise, the font should be 12-point Times New Roman (though 12-point Arial and Calibri are often fine). Double space the entire paper, including each line of the header and all indented quotations. Don’t add an extra space before or after any paragraph. This page is based on the MLA Handbook, 7th ed. 2009; the 2016 8th edition does not address format issues and so offers no changes. Entries on the "Works Cited" page, however, represent 8th edition guidelines.

Cary Wilcox
Dr. F. McCourt
English 1011
10 September 2016

Canny Title

is, mattis a hendrerit sit amet, congue sit amet dolor. Aliquam erat ipat. Aenean sit amet magna metus, eu tincidunt ipsum. Suspendisse posuere libero sit amet sapien pretium eleifend. Etiam libero sapien, imperdiet vel rhoncus eu, ornare et mauris. Mauris fringilla, ipsum vitae hendrerit pretium, eros augue pharetra tellus, mattis fermentum enim erat id ligula.

Mauris in dolor massa, vita congue ante. Sed risus erat, mattis vitae mattis et, congue a leo. Praesent pora risus at nisi posuere gravida. Donec ultricies tempus risus, in rhoncus lacinus faucibus in.

Pellentesque magna ante, euismod at mattis ut, scelerisque id neque. Mauris vestibulum neque at magna placerat in egestas urna venenatis. Donec luctus libero a tortor tincidunt eget aliquet lorem fringilla. Vivamus placerat lacus a ipsum tincidunt ac adipiscing justo imperdiet. (56)

This is what the “Works Cited” page of an MLA-style paper looks like. Continue double spacing all entries without adding any extra spaces. Continue to number each page as if it were part of your paper. Alphabetize each entry by the last name of the first author. Consult our “MLA Style” handout for help in formatting specific entries.

Wilcox 6

Works Cited

Bour, Isabelle. “Mary Brunton’s Novels, or, the Twilight of Sensibility.” Scottish Literary Journal, vol. 24, no.2, Nov.1997, pp. 24-35.

